

Debt funds curriculum

Introduction

In recent years, private debt has clearly become a very attractive class of assets on the radar of many investors. Private debt has always been a good diversification tool compared to traditional asset classes and demonstrates a high level of resilience and growth during the last troubled market times.

As governments gradually reduce and phase out their stimulus programmes, private debt should play a key role in the future financing of our real economy. Therefore, the interest of Limited Partners for the 3rd alternative asset class should not diminish and may even strengthen. Businesses (especially SMEs) need bridge financing to survive the crisis, as well as guidance and expertise to navigate the current economic environment. Private credit managers are well-positioned to benefit from this.

It is important to demystify private debt: what is a private debt fund? How is it structured: tax wise - operationally wise? What are the key concepts about fair valuation, GAAP optionality? How can they be structured? How to administer them?

In close collaboration with PwC's subject matter experts, PwC's Academy has designed a debt funds training curriculum that accurately answers all those questions and many others.
